

TOWERING skyscrapers. Bustling shopping malls. Frenetic nightlife. A dizzying spectacle of neon lights. Life in the city offers an overabundance of just about everything, from the essential to the fanciful. Unfortunately, even pollution is in excess, as is the problem of overpopulation, with the urban space congested with makeshift apartments, and major thoroughfares are almost always clogged with various modes of transport. City life is frantic, always moving at a hurried pace.

For the tireless single urbanite, this rat race may be a welcome adventure; but for those contemplating on starting a family, it is quite unacceptable. Who would want to raise a family in a cramped apartment, with nothing more than a few square feet of space to offer and windows with an uninspiring view of the concrete firewall of the building next door? Who would feel safe with the streets as your child's playground? While the city may be exhilarating with its modern conveniences and technology, a family life here can be exhausting and expensive as well.

Century Properties, the largest privately owned real estate company in the Philippines, has recognized the desire of many urban dwellers to relocate to a suburban home. As a multitude of new developments have sprouted South of the City, more and more families have found the South to be the perfect location for them.

Century Properties found the perfect location that has the ideal mix of proximity to the Makati Central Business District and terrain and climate that would make you feel as if you are in a resort town or California style Ranch. The result became the fastest selling project South of Makati: Canyon Ranch.
